what is the past participle of the verb "bear"

The past participle of the verb "bear" is "borne" or "born," depending on the context.

- "Borne" is typically used when referring to carrying a burden, responsibility, or something physically. For example: "He has borne the weight of his family's expectations."
- "Born" is used when referring to the birth of a person or animal. For example: "She was born in New York."

Please note that there is a distinction between these two forms of the past participle based on their usage.
