II. THE MINUTE HISTORIANS

DR. JOHNSON¹ VIEWS THE PRESS

... the most writers among his contemporaries, Samuel Johnson devoted ... years to the Press. He contributed to the Gentleman's Magazine ... later started the Rambler (1750-52) on the model of the Spectator ... he wrote the Idler columns for the Universal Chronicle. Although the Idler is lighter in touch than the Rambler, neither has t of the Spectator. More of a philosopher than a gentleman, Johnson ... rather than manners. But the Press too had changed. His essay ... news and advertisements, which explains w
